The issue before the voters last night were singularly involved, and there was comparatively few opportunities, except by the passage of definite resolutions for an expression of the individual preference for presidential candidates. With the exception of a few scattered in-stances, Secretary Taft's name was the orly one mentioned for president at the caucuses. Nevertheless, a great majority of the delegates chosen to both state and district conventions were ou-hampered by pledges. There was a number of interesting contests, especially in the second, third fourth, sixth, eighth, tenth, eleventh and GOVERNOR GUILD fourteenth districts. There was, however, a well defined issue throughout the state as to whether delegates would go to Chicago pledged in the interests of Secretary Taft or should be left free to pursue their own inclinations as to a presidential candidate. The contest slong these lines was fought out by two opposing factions of the party with well known leaders in charge.
